40. It found that humans and primates comfort one another and demonstrate care in a similar way.

41. It symbolizes safety and love which are important to both children and adults.

42. > Touch has the great power to give people who suffer from “touch hunger” strong emotional experiences, but a brief touch like a handshake is too light to convey love and care.

Even a brief touch like a handshake is enough to convey love and care.

43. (1) I often write notes to people I love. For example, I often write notes to remind my family to put on their coats on cold days, expressing my care and love. When reading the warm Words, they feel loved and cared.

(2) I often have little conversations with my loved ones. Talking with my parents after school can help relieve their tiredness from work. Besides, I prepare gifts for them on special occasions. The handmade gifts convey my appreciation for what they have done for me.

Dear Jim,

How is it going? We plan to form a research-based learning group. I wonder whether you would like to join us.

Our topic is “A Study on the Differences between British English and American English”. We mainly focus on their differences in terms of spelling, pronunciation and vocabulary. The aim is to make us familiar with the underlying causes and effects of the differences so that we can gain a better understanding of the English language.

I know you are a native speaker of British English and you lived in America for several years, so hopefully you can give us some guidance during the research process. Please inform me of your decision by this Friday.

Your involvement will add much joy to our group. Looking forward to your reply.

Yours,

Li Hua

Dear Jim,

As you know, we are required to do research-based learning this term. I am writing to invite you to join my team.

Here is the detailed information. We intend to compare Chinese literature and English literature in the same historical period, for example, Shakespeare and Tang Xianzu of the Ming Dynasty. Since there was little chance for pure literary exchange between nations in history, what we are doing can help great writers from China and Britain talk spiritually to some extent.

I want you in because I know you have a great passion for British literature. Your professional knowledge will surely help us in efficiency and accuracy. Also, just imagine the sense of awe you may get from the similarities and differences we will find. If you are interested, let me know before next Friday.

Looking forward to your reply!

Yours,

Li Hua

Dear Jim,

I'm establishing a research-based learning team on English study. I wonder if you would like to be a member of it.

I plan to study how to improve our English ability by watching English movies. Ten classic English movies like Forrest Gump will be covered. We will analyse the authentic expressions and native pronunciations, and discuss how to apply them to English study. As watching English movies offers an easy access to English a learning, this project will give students a clue about enjoyable and practical learning methods.

Knowing you have conducted relevant research, I think my project may feed your interest from a different angle. Moreover, I'm sure your participation will increase the efficiency of completing tasks. If you'd like to come, please let me know before next Friday.

I sincerely hope that we can work together on this project.

Yours,

Li Hua
